In a very distant village, there lived a family. Everything was good for them. The head of the household was a handyman. Among his tools, there was a very unusual instrument. It was not necessary and had been lying in the attic for many years. Every time there was a general cleaning, all the family members advised getting rid of this strange object. But the man didn't listen to anyone and kept the instrument.

Many years passed, and it was time to repair the floor. Under the layer that was supposed to be replaced with a new one, something unusual was accidentally discovered. It looked like a peculiar and unseen lock. They tried poking at it with various things, but there was no result. Everyone was ready to leave the peculiar object alone and start installing a new covering on top. Suddenly, the head of the household told everyone to wait and disappeared into the attic. He quickly returned, holding his unusual instrument in his hands. Strangely enough, the lock yielded to the peculiar object. Unexpectedly, a passage appeared in the floor. When the curious family members entered inside, they discovered countless treasures. Since then, life in that family took a completely different turn.

And so it is with us :) We fail to appreciate someone very important to everyone until the moment they become necessary, sometimes even vital, and they are no longer around. We ourselves are to blame. Stay healthy!
